EXPERT COUNTERS HAVE EASY TIME

Rockefeller's "Bit" Would Be "Pie" for These Fast Workers. So Would Carnegie's.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23.—if the wealth of the sinfully rich men of the country could be reduced to national banknotes (none of which is of a denomination smaller than 35), and if the nineteen most expert counters of money employed in the Tresaury of the United States were set to the task of counting it, they would consume nearly fifty-two days arriving at a count of Rockefeller's days arriving at a count of Rockefeller's lays arriving at a count of Rockefeller's lollars.

dollars.

It would take them a fraction over twenty-four days to tally the dollars of Andrew Carnegle or J. Pierpont Morgan, the popular notion being that each has about three hundred and fifty million dollars stowed away. A "conservative" estimate made by a man who has no dollars is that Rockefeller is worth only 4759,000,000.

Assuming from recent reports that Weyerhausen, the name of the lumber trust king, is worth about six hundred million dollars, it would take the fast counters a little more than forty-one days to arrive at the answer to the question, "How much?"

William B. Ridgeley, Comptroller of the Currency, has just had a count made of the "unused" money in his keeping. It took the nineteen expert counters two weeks to ascertain that the $175,000,000 supposed to be, in the vault reserved for money of that kind was really there."
